Corn Spraying Hints

Spraying of corn with 2,4-D should be used in conjunction with and not as a replacement for cultivation, O. C. Lee, Purdue University extension botanist, has advised Hoosier farmers.

It is most practical and economical to spray with 2,4-D to control weeds in corn fields where ordinary cultivation does not do an adequate job of eradication. Spraying may also be considered as an emergency measure when weeds threaten to ruin the corn erop during periods of wet weather when cultivation is not possible. In this case spraying with 2.4-D may save the crop.

Lee says cultivation is still us-ally necessary to control grassy eeds that not killed by spraying th 2,4-D. Two types of 2,4-D-amine and ster-are on the market. Both re liquids and either may be sed in corn fields. Spraying may done at any time after the orn emerges. Best results are sually obtained when the weeds re small, Lee reports. An ordinary field type sprayer equipped with a straight boom is most practical for spraying when corn is up to one foot in height. When larger corn is spraved, drops should be attached to the boom so as to apply the spray at the base of the corn and directly to the weeds. Spraying over the top with a straight boom when corn is in this stage may not only cause injury to the corn

Look For Alfalfa Leafspot

Alfalfa should be cut as soon as possible if leafspot disease begins to cause defoliation.

Purdue University plant pathologists report that if the early cuttings of alfalfa are made as soon as defoliation sets in, most of the leaves will be saved and sources of infection for later #### growth will be removed. Common leafspot is one of the most destructive diseases of alfalfa. Plants are not killed by the disease, but defoliation causes loss of vigor and reduces hay quality and yield. In general, the second and third hay crops are damaged more than the first.

Small circular chocolate-brown spots, about one-sixteenth inch in diameter, develop on the lower alfalfa leaflets. When the spots are fully developed, the centers with

become thickened and a tiny, light brown, cup-shaped fruiting body forms on the upper surface of the leaf. The presence of these fruiting bodies in the center of the spots serves as means for positive identification of the disease.

All of the adapted varieties of alfalfa are at least moderately susceptible to common leafspot, according to the Purdue plant pathologists. Highly resistant lines have been selected and are being incorporated into new synthetic varieties.

Observations during the past week indicate that leafspot will be a problem in Indiana this year. Recent heavy rains are liable to cause the disease to spread very rapidly, the plant pathologists report.

Economics Of Grain Drying

Indiana's small grain harvest will be in full swing within a few weeks.

In view of this, Purdue agricultural economists and engineers Marketing have outlined a plan-in a new publication - which individual farmers can use to determine probable costs and returns for drying grain.

According to the Purdue specialists, the economy of drying grain for an individual farmer depends on the initial level of the grain, market prices, discount schedules in his area, and his volume of drving.

Other benefits from drying listed in station bulletin 630 are: avoidance of field losses by earlier harvest, reduced risk of substantial crop loss in very wet years, reduced investment needed for storage under government programs, reduced insect problems in storage, more certainty of meeting qualifications for storage, reduced amount of harvesting during disagreeable weather, assurance of quality feed supply, planting of wheat immediately following corn, and use with picker-sheller.

Negative factors associated with farm drying of grain are the fact that equipment may not be needed every year and present dryers may become obsolete, discount schedules may change, possibility of over-drying grain, alternative investments may yield higher or more certain returns, and dryers may be of little use on livestock farms.

To generalize whether or not drying grain is profitable on Indiana farms is difficult, the specialists report. Each farmer must budget his probable costs and returns in order to make a wise decision.

A copy of station bulletin 630, 'An Economic Analysis of Drying Wheat and Corn on Indiana Farms," will help a farmer de-Lafavette, Ind .--- Hog prices are expected to reach a summer peak during June and early July, according to agricultural economists at Purdue University.

However, the economists added that a rather sharp price drop may then develop if farmers, remembering the substantial price decline which occured last year, bunch marketing more than usual. The economists see a much this fall and winter than the $10 decline of a year ago.

Price of milk going into fluid use in much of Indiana will be higher than it otherwise would have been by 46 cents per 100 pounds in May and June and 26 cents per 100 pounds during July. This increase is due to the elimination of the usual summer decline in milk prices in most federal order markets. The adjustment is in addition to the 10 cents per hundredweight increase in federal price support levels smaller seasonal hog price decline for the current marketing year. Higher prices for fed cattle for the June to September period are indicated because of prospective reductions in numbers and weights of cattle to be marketed. Feeder cattle prices during the remainder of 1956 are expected to continue lower than during 1955.

Broiler prices are expected to weaken and feeding ratios to decline further during the next several weeks.

GENERAL INSURANCE

A farmer who owns an irrigation system should check the pump, power unit, pipe, couplers and sprinklers now, according to Purdue University agricultural engineers. When dry weather "sets in" have the irrigation system ready to "set up."

There are too many poorly constructed and poorly maintained privies. Flies have ready access to the human wastes and then fly to your dinner tables.

There are far too many sewers emptying directly into lakes and streams. It is illegal to empty sewage into stream or lakes.

Too many towns in Kosciusko County do not have adequate. sewers. The usual situation is that the townspeople have connected to the storm tiles (or ditches as they are called). These tiles in turn empty into stream or fields dumping raw sewage where it has access to insects and can be a source of disease.

There are too many places in this county where I can place a dye into toilets and within a few minutes see this dye flowing into a stream, lake or onto an open field.

There is a housing project in this county that is a definite health menace. At least 25 homes are known to have the effluent from their septic tanks connected to the field tiles which run through the area. These empty into an open ditch in a field and cause a stagnant pool during the summer months, some of the others empty into a creek. The developer of this housing project has told people that this practice is alright. It definitely is not and contitutes a serious public health menace.

Lake sanitation is a major problem during the summer in Kosciusko County. Our major task is to try to keep people from drinking or swimming in their own or their neighbor's sewage.

Sewage is not a pleasant subject to discuss; neither are the diseases which may be caused by neglecting the subject. Sewage may cause such diseases as typhoid fever, poliomelitis, serious food poisoning, infectious hepititis (yellow juandice) amoebic dysentry and many other serious diseases

Typhoid fever is a serious disease. It may be prevented by good sanitation. Until good sanitation is universal then it is best to prevent it like the armed forces do

Sweet Corn Wilt

Bacterial wilt of sweet corn may become prevalent this summer but a Purdue University plant pathologist, A. J. Ullstrup, has listed some control measures which may help to prevent extensive damage.

Ullstrup says the disease sometimes called Stewart's, Wilt, first appears as pale, yellow streaks on the young leaves. Later the streaks become wilted and dry and in severe cases, the entire plant wilts and dies before an ear is produced.

Bacteria, which cause the wilt, spend the winter in the bodies and on the mouth parts of corn flea beetles that spend the winter in hibernation in grass along fence rows. As soon as the weather becomes warm in the spring these insects begin to feed on corn seedlings, and in so doing infect the plants with the disease-producing bacteria. Once a plant becomes infected nothing can be done to prevent spread of the disease within the plant.

According to Ullstrup, one means of controlling the disease is to destroy the corn fiea beetle that carries the disease-producing bacteria. This can be done by dusting corn with 5 percent DDT powder or spraying with a 25 percent DDT emulsion concentrate at the rate of 4 teaspoonfuls per gallon of water. Treatment should commence as soon as seedlings emerge and continue at weekly intervals until tassels appear.

In spite of a low average temperature for the three winter months of 1955-56, which was expected to kill many corn flea beetles, the insects already appear quite numerous on young corn seedlings. The beetle is shiny black, oval in shape, about onesixteenth of an inch long, and when disturbed jumps like a flea.

A second means of control is to plant resistant hybrids. White sweet corn hybrids such as the Country Gentlemen and Evergreen types are more resistant than the yellow hybrids. Of the vellow hybrids, Golden Cross Bantam and Golden Harvest are less susceptible. Early maturing hybrids, in general, are more susceptible to bacterial wilt than late maturing hybrids.

Keep Troughs On Sod

Feed troughs for growing pullets on pasture should be kept on areas covered with sod, according to Joe W. Sicer, Purdue University poultryman.

Sicer says since pullets spend so much time near the feeders. there will always be a heavy deposit of droppings. If these droppings accumulate on bare ground a crust of manure will form and ideal conditions will result for disease development. And, rain makes a mess of such an accumulation.

When the troughs are on a thick sod, much of the droppings will work down through the grass and will not be trampled as much by the chickens. If the troughs are moved a bit each day when the country pres.

the feed is replenished, there will never be a heavy accumulation of droppings in any one spot. Moving the troughs also encourages a wider use of the pasture, Sicer adds

Corn Cultivation Varies

How many times should corn be cultivated? Actually there's no "rule of thumb" to go by, according to M. O. Pence, Purdue University agronomist.

Pence says the number of cultivations necessary varies with soil type, kind of season, seed bed preparation, kind and number of weeds, pre-cultivation practices, and timeliness of operations. In actual practice, farmers cultivate as often as they think profitable or until corn is too tall

Twenty years ago most Indiana corn growers cultivated corn more han twice. However, today more han half of the 4000 farmers aking part in the Five-acre Corn Club cultivate once or not nore than twice. On the average herefore, good corn growers are ultivating corn about half as many times as they did 20 years go. Yields have increased despite fewer cultivations, Pence stated

Four apparent reasons for fewer cultivations today are: Farmers have more power and better equipment to prepare seed beds and destroy weeds before planting; more use is being made of the rotary hoe or spike tooth harrow before the corn is large enough for cultivation; rowfertilized corn grows faster, giving less time for extra cultivations; and weeds are being controlled by other practices, such as chemical spraying, heavier fertilizations and greater corn population and water intake on tight heavy soils. Once weeds are under control and the soil loose, further cultivation is of little value. Avoid excess pruning of the corn roots by shallow cultivation just deep enough to destroy weeds, Pence suggests.

The main benefit of cultivation ≫weed control. However, cultivation also improves soil aeration

Improvements at National Park

Preparations are being made for a face-lifting operation of the nation's oldest and largest national park.

According to the Chicago Motor Club Touring Bureau, four million dollars will be spent in construction work at Yellowstone National Park within the next two years.

The Motor Club says this is part of a major 10-year program to provide modernized visitor facilities in this outdoor region of Wyoming-Montana-Idaho.

Cabins presently are under construction at Gardner, Mont. to be moved during the summer to the village area at Canyon Lodge in the park. This is part of a two million dollar project in this particular area, which will include lodges, dormitories, a large store and a service station, the Motor Club said.

In addition, the Club said, the National Park Service has awarded contracts for road and utilities construction and the groundbreaking of these projects is expected soon.

This construction work is the first to "be conducted at Yellowstone under the Interior Department's expansion program known as "Mission 66." Within the next decade it will involve an expenditure by the Yellowstone Park Co. of 131/2 million dollars in order to accommodate the more than one million visitors who flood the park each summer season fail to perform preventive maintenance and are included to let their mowers "suffer." Mowers will give good service if they are kept in adjustment and repaired occassionally.

If mowers are not in good condition, operators may notice that clogging incidents occur, and that on inspection will find the stubble has a ragged, torn apparance. A cutterbar which has not received adequate attention will increase the power required to operate the mower. In addition, increased vibration from any loose fitting parts and dull cutting edges is hard on the mower, tractor, and operator.

Any good farm shop should contain adequate tools to keep a mowing machine in top-notch cutting condition. Such tools include a sickle grinder and mower anvil plus the required hand tools.

As a guide to maintenance which should be performed to keep a mower cutting well, Pur-due extension leaflet 285 has just been published. A free copy of the new publication, entitled "Add Zip to Your Mower," can be obtained from the agricultural publications office at Purdue, or from the county extension agent

Many Cows Low Producers

"There are too many low producing cows on Indiana dairy farms," G. A. Williams, Purdue University extension dairyman, has revealed.

Williams said that the average milk production of the state's 593,000 dairy cows is just 6600 pounds per cow. This yearly output gives Indiana a rank of 15th among the states in milk production

While dairy cow numbers have decreased in the state in recent years, one out of every five cows in 1500 herds involving 30,000 cows tested by DHIA supervisors failed to produce 300 pounds of butterfat in 12 months.

Many of the cows now found in this "twilight profit" group would return larger incomes to their owners if better care and management was provided.

More and better pastures are ol-bal.

needed, Williams reported. Grasslegume mixtures produce several times as much milk per acre throughout the season as unimproved bluegrass. Loss due to tramping will be reduced if the pasture acreage is divided into several smaller parts and the herd moved at frequent intervals. Coarse, ungrazed grass should be clipped to stimulate new growth.

Shade is a definite asset to any pasture. If natural protection is not available, a temporary cover may be constructed of poles and covered with straw. Since cows do little grazing during the day, it's better to provide them shelter in dry lot where hay or silage may be fed if shade is not available.

Water is also important as it makes up about 85 percent of every can of milk produced.

Even with good feeding and management practices, some cows lack inherited ability. "They just can't produce enough milk to make them profitable," Williams said.

Boarder cows which make up a considerable part of the cows producing less than 300 pounds of butterfat, should be sold for slaughter. If such cows were disposed of, Indiana's rank among the states should improve, the Purdue specialist concluded.

Tears Down Horse Thief Assoc. Building

Bert Holloway announced Monday that he was tearing down a building that was erected by a Horse Thief Association at Mentone. The building, about 8 x 10 feet in size, was used by the association to house their bloodhounds. The structure was built up with 2x4s and Bert said he got about 125 of them from the small unit.

The building originally stood on the old Charles Huffer place, now owned by Ote Darr, about two miles east and two miles south of Mentone. It was moved to the present Holloway place by Bert's father - in - law, Wallace Hibschman.

As near as we can learn, the Horse Thief Association was a real necessity in the days of the "swishing" motors and six-foot accelerators. George Lyons was at the head of the association and it seems the bloodhounds were used when the license number of a missing animal wasn't known.

The association, we presume confined its activities strictly to "missing sorrels and related paraphernalia. Reckless drivers, an abundance of whom they had in those days, performed about as they do today.

Fishing Season To Open

One thing about humanity one can be certain of, and that is that everyone can always think of an excuse. Education seems to be of little value when it comes to hatching out an idea for either getting out of something or trying to get permission to do something.

Even in this hot weather, it is a safe bet that the fishermen of the county have a full set of excuses brewed up to use some time between now and midnight Friday, when the fishing season opens on game fish.

One change in the regulations is that you will be able to keep bass of any size.

Our politically appointed and caucus-room selected conservation department officials have been playing with the conservation laws worse than a cat with a half-dead mouse, and seemingly have little regard for what it may or may not do for hunting and fishing for the future generations.

Indiana, because of its absurd policies of using the conservation department as one of the political patronage plums, has lost some of the finest men any state could ever hope to have, yet we continue to let politics regulate the department.

The sad dilemma in which our state now finds itself is not the fault of the officials that are now in power, but it is the fault of its people in that they permit to exist a system that is such a detriment to us.

The season that opens in this area Saturday has been open all the time in another area of the state, and in recent years we have had numerous times when seasons were closed or not closed. due perhaps not upon the experienced judgment of capable men, but the pressure of politicalor commercial-minded groups.

I'd better call a halt to this before some of our ardent fisherman bite the heads off of their night-crawlers before the season even opens.

mimeographs which deal with tree diseas

If you find the leaves of your pin oak are yellowing, chances are the tree is not getting enough iron from the soil. Your county agent has a mimeograph on this disease known as pin oak chlorosis. This mimeo lists the symptoms and explains that you can correct the oak's iron deficiency by applying either ammonium sulfate or sulfur to the ground under the tree. The rate and method of applications are included.

If the leaves of your sycamore are noticeably ragged, with light brown, dead areas along and between the leaf veins, be suspe cious of anthracnose. The county agent will also have a mimeograph dealing with the chemical treatment for control of this disease.

Consult the agent in your county for the following tree disease mimeos "Sycamore Blight," 'Anthracnose of Shade Trees," "Pin Oak Chlorosis" and "Leaf Scorch of Shade Trees"

LAUREL W. CLINGENPEE

GENERAL CONTRACTOR

Carpenter and Mason Work

Mid-June is an ideal time to transplant cabbage, cauliflower and broccoli for the fall crop, according to W. B. Ward, Purdue University extension horticulturist.

Box 12, Atwood, Indiana

Ward says best results from these cole crops will be obtained from the late maturing or fall crop. Plants should be set sometime between June 10 and June 25 for the fall harvest.

Only "yellow disease" resistant varieties of cabbage are recom-mended for the home garden. Plants should be set 18 to 20 inches apart in rows approximately two feet apart. Each plant should be set deep enough to prevent "wind whipping." Unless the soil is very moist, the plants should be "watered in" when set.

Recommended varieties of cabbages include Risistant Glory and Wisconsin All Seasons ' Marion Market and Bugner are good varieties for kraut and winter storage.

Cauliflower and broccoli can be set at the same time and in the same manner as cabbage. All the cole crops should be sprayed or dusted to keep off the pests, Ward adds.

Shelter for Hens

A Purdue University extension poultryman, Melvin L. Wilson has offered a solution to a problem which confronts egg producers each summer.

As summer weather nears, the temperature in hen houses goes up and the rate of lay goes down. Wilson says this condition can be corrected, to a certain degree, by placing the layers in a building which offers a greater flow of air.

A pole type house with a metal roof and wire fencing sides can is to move the layers to a machine | and back could be covered with shed or a similar building with an open front. The open end would need to be wired.

Either the pole type or con-verted shed can be used for layers after the pullets have come into production. The modern-day hen is bred to lay for longer periods than one season, so the shelter can be used as long as the birds are producing eggs at a profit.

If a pole house is constructed, the building can be used the year around. However, Wilson says it would be necessary to close in the sides and ends. The sides could a wirebase glass substitute. The glass substitute will permit penetration of sun rays and a considerable amount of solar heat will be retained in the house. Allowance should be made for the same amount of ventilation as in a regular house of similar design.

If not needed to house layers in the winter, the pole construction can be used to store straw or hay, or for a sheep shelter.

Further information on construction of a pole type shelter is available in Mid-West Plan No. 72750, available at a 30 cents cost from the Mid-West Plan Service Headquarters, Iowa State College, Ames, Iowa. Purdue and 14 other midwest universities are cooperating on this pole type shelter project.

"Make hay and grass silage during June," advise Purdue University agronomists. Good legume or legume-grass hay is excellent feed if cut at the proper time and made without losing the leaves. Two-thirds of the protein is in the leaves. Alfalfa should be cut as soon as possible after it reaches the tenth bloom stage, and red clover between half and full bloom. Later cut hay is less palatable and lower in total feed value. This is also true of grass silage, according to the agronomists.

Even with the possibility of substantial price increases during the next storage season, the cost of storage will have an important bearing on whether a farmer decides to sell his wheat at harvest or store it for later sale. Cost of storage for a 10month period averages about 20 cents per bushel in Indiana. Increased risk of insect and rodent contamination during storage will also play an important part in making the decision to store or sell wheat this year.

Remove Heavy Hay Growth

Heavy growth of alfalfa-brome grass or similar mixtures cut and left on the ground are likely to be damaging to stands, according to K. E. Beeson, Purdue University agronomist. Whether such cutting is part of the Soil Bank Program or is a loss of hay due to wet weather, or other causes, the #### problem is the same. Probably the best plan is to windrow, shred and blow the cuttings back on the field with a hay chopper. Removal of hay from the field and piling in washes or gullies is more expensive and wastes plant food that should be well distributed in the field, says Beeson.

If the hay yield is only a ton or slightly more per acre, the cutting may be left in the swath, as little or no damage will occur.

Burning off dry growth is not recommended. Shredding the standing crop is also a possibility.

Where the crop is not to be harvested, mowing is recommended. Long time fertility effect, vigorous recovery growth, and weed control are advantages. Weeds are checked more effectively by low cutting than high. Stage of cutting is the same as for hay. Alfalfa will make the best recovery if it has started to bloom.

The roots will be well replenished with plant food by the full blossom stage. Cutting too early weakens plants and thins out the stands.

Grasses, generally are less damaged by early cutting than legumes. High cutting of alfalfa and grass at the hay stage is no advantage. Recovery growth comes from crown buds that are near the soil surface. No management system of red and sweetclover will cause these plants to survive past their normal two year period of growth in Indiana. Kenland red clover may live into the third year. Generally, repeating stands must come from receeding. Some volunteering may occur after a seed crop has matured. Alsike is more likely to volunteer than red clover. Ladino with high phosphate levels and moisture is very likely to survive indefinitely.

Shade Hogs For More Gain

Hogs should be provided plenty of shade for economical gains this summer, Richard Hollandbeck, Purdue University extension swine specialist, has advised Hoosier farmers.

Shade is important to hogs because they do not sweat, according to Hollandbeck. When the hogs are uncomfortable from the heat they gain slowly and utilize feed poorly.

Experiments have shown that high temperature has more effect on gains and feed utilization as Motorists taking to the road over the Fourth of July are urged to be on the alert for the heedless and reckless minority who will be responsible for holiday injuries and deaths in traffic crashes.

The Chicago Motor Club predicts that 8 persons will die and 280 will be injured in Indiana traffic accidents over July 4th. In the neighboring state of Illinois, 15 traffic deaths have been predicted.

Pedestrians will contribute heavily to the July 4th death toll, if previous traffic statistics can be used as a barometer. Figures reveal that five of every nine traffic fatalities are pedestrians, and in majority of cases the pedestrian is at fault.

Charles M. Hayes, president of the Motor Club, calls upon motorists and pedestrians alike to keep the traffic toll at a minimum, adding:

'Pedestrians should cross only at intersections, always obeying traffic signals. They should look both directions before crossing. Jaywalking is an invitation to injury or death. Those walking along busy streets or highways should wear light clothing or carry a light."

The Motor Club president reiterated his previous advice for motorists, those suggestions including:

1. Drive reasonable distances If you get tired, take a catnap, 2. Drive at a reasonable speed. 3. Keep in the proper lane and don't follow too closely. 4. Pay attention to the signals, signs and road markings.

5. Don't be impatient. Passing on hills and curves is suicide, and give yourself plenty of room when passing.

6. Don't over-indulge in food or drink if you're driving. Wear light clothing.

7. Be courteous on the road. Don't try to "beat the other fellow."

Winning Essay On Americanism

Carl Peterson Makeup Thomas Harman Press-Makeup

Below is the essay chosen for first place in the Senior division of the American Legion Auxiliary contest:

"JUSTICE FOR ALL" By Rita Olson

America has become a world leader because she stands for equality, freedom, and justice for all. The central theme of our democracy is the importance of the individual person; we believe that all men are created equal and are endowed with certain inalienable rights. We are proud of this. But if we want to hold the confidence of other countries we must do away with practices of discrimination and prejudices that exist in our country.

The right to safety and security of the person is one of the most important of our individual rights. But where the administration of justice is discriminatory, no man can be sure of security.

The judical process does not always give full and equal justice. The basic principle that "all peo-

the bar of justice in each Loose Smut ican court." is often violat-

is usually the minority s that suffer in such cases. times the accused person is provided with adequate leounsel, evidence is procured ird-degree means, and perof these groups are excluded jury lists. Too frequently a by one's peers has little trial meaning to them because of the complete absence from the jury of people of their own kind.

A striking example of this kind of discrimination was the case of the Negro boy, Emmett Till. If that jury had not been exclusively white, would the decision have been different?

We still have occasional lynching of Negroes. And the lynchers escape punishment because they are condoned by their communities. Even the federal government can do little in the face of local resistance.

Where a minority group is concerned even public officials sometimes fail to carry out their duties. They take advantage of the opportunity to mistreat persons they are supposed to protect.

The fee system encourages unjust convictions. Usually minority groups suffer most from this system.

Without equality our freedom is a mere illusion and peoples of other countries will wonder if they can be guaranteed freedom and equality if they join with us.

America is making progress toward correcting these problems. And as our people realize these differences between our principles and our practices, our nation will come closer to the ultimate ideal of freedom-equality and justice for all.

Hits Wheat

Indiana farmers should inspect their wheat fields as soon as possible after the crop has headed to determine the presence and amount of loose smut, Purdue University plant pathologists, have reported.

If over one smuteed head per hundred is observed in a field, it is recommended that wheat from that field not be saved for seed.

According to the plant pathologists, loose smut is probably the most prevalent and most easily recognized wheat disease in Indiana. In some years many many fields will suffer losses from loose smut as high as five percent of their potential yield. And losses may be even higher in some fields.

In loose smut infected plants, the normal wheat heads are replaced by a powdery black mass of spores. Since the rest of the plant appears normal, the disease connot be recognized until heading time. If fields are not observed soon after heading, the presence of loose smut may not be detected. The bare central stalks are much less noticeable than the black spore masses present at heading and immediaately after.

The pathologists say that the simplest control practice is to plant seed only from fields known to have been low in sumt All Indiana certified seed wheat fits this condition as it is inspected for loose smut and connot have more than one percent smut to qualify for certification.

Those who wish to have their soil tested call Mentone 3-2705

Try sipping onion soup while holding your nose, or when you have a head cold. The characteristic flavor vanishes. All that is left is a hot, somewhat salty liquid. By means of taste alone, you can barely distinguish between a food you love and one you detest.

the Flavors reach "through the back door": they travel from the mouth down the throat and then up again along the air passages which lead to the nasal cavities. You "smell" when you inhale; you sense flavors when you exhale; otherwise the two processes are the same. Both depend upon your olfactory tracts -the nerve-rich surfaces which form the ceilings of your two nasal cavities. Each olfactory area is about the size of a postage stamp and located so high in the nasal passages that, during ordinary inhaling, moderately odorous air may pass under it without arousing any smell sensations. When you see something whose odor you wish to sample, you sniff and this carries the odorladen air upward to the olfactory tract. There is no need to sniff while you eat, though. As you chew your food, warm vapors are released from it: the act of swallowing and the related act of exhaling pump these flavor-laden vapors upward toward the nose. In general, the higher the temperature of a substance the more molecules are given off and the more intense is the odor. This explains why good cooks insist on serving dishes piping-hot. -Science News Letter

An Indiana State Chamber of Commerce survey reported re-cently that Hoosiers were charged $1,570,131,064 in federal taxes in 1955

Local property taxes collectible for the year amounted to $291,-047,000, while state taxes added up to $260,322,342. The gross income tax account-

More than 40 cents of every dollar distributed by the state in fiscal 1955 went back to local units of government-for schools, highways and streets, public welfare and other purposes.

Jack E. Reich, executive vice

Gives Pig Feeding Facts

Indiana 4-H youths entered in pig projects have been given some valuable tips by Richard Hollandbeck, Purdue University extension swine specialist. Commercial pork producers may also profit from Hollandbeck's advice for feeding pigs this summer.

For maximum gains on good legume pasture, pigs between 40 and 70 pounds should be given a 6-2-2 ration. The Purdue specialist said that in each 100 pounds of ration, there should be 60 pounds of coarse ground shelled corn, 20 pounds of coarse ground oats or wheat, and 20 pounds of protein supplement. And, it's a good idea to fortify production is celebrated, admired cents on each dollar of sales, deantibiotic supplement. Ten to 15 grams of antibiotic should be addéd per ton of ration.

A 7-2-1 ration is suitable for pigs on pasture from 75 to 100 pounds up to exhibit or market time. A 100 pound ration would include 70 pounds of coarse ground shelled corn, 20 pounds of coarse ground oats, and 10 pounds of protein supplement.

Proper development of spring pigs depends on a system of feeding and management which will insure rapid, continuous and eco-

Fresh water and shade should be available at all times with feeders placed nearby. Watering devices should be fastened down to insure a constant water supply. Mud holes can be filled with gravel or corn cobs. Eight square feet of shade for each pig should be provided. A shade shelter should be four to five feet high for free circulation of air, Hollandbeck says.

The American system of mass volved. And it is an industry in retail distribution may not be so well-publicized-but it is equally important. In fact, mass production couldn't exist without it. For instance, to keep one man at work in the soap industry people must take 6 million baths in the course of a year. To keep one man at work in the refrigeration business, 60 of the machines must be sold. To keep one man at work in stocking production, 12 thousand pairs must move into the hands of consumers. So it goes, down the endless list of things we all use.

It takes a tremendously efficient and vital retail industry to sell the ware our factories produce. It is an industry which works on an amazingly small unit profit, too-one to three or four which there is room for all kinds and sizes of stores to prosper-all the way from little family enterprises to the big national chains.

In distribution, as in production, there is fair and aggressive competition all along the line.

That is what makes for good s vice, a wide variety of offerings; and a fair price.

The Mentone fire department was called to the Floyd Tucker farm, southwest of Mentone, on Monday to put out a fire in a tractor.

The tractor had been refueled and after standing for quite some time, an attempt was made to start it, it caught fire on the first explosion of the motor.

The operator threw a canvas over the tractor, which held the fire down until the department arrived. The only loss was the canvas and some of the tractor motor wiring.
